March 2026

Note: Pete Buttigieg left his role as Secretary of Transportation in January 2025. He is now a private citizen, remains active on social media, and is widely considered a potential 2028 Democratic presidential candidate. No official office address exists. Social media direct message is the most effective current contact route.

Step 1 — Public Post / Reply (Twitter/X):

Use this short public post to tag him and open the conversation:

.@PeteButtigieg — A mayor, veteran, and Rhodes Scholar understands civic capability better than most. I've built a national framework for experiential civic education — bipartisan, built on proven programs, $57-$87/student/year. Would love to share the white paper. #LongExperiment

Step 2 — Direct Message:

Send this as a follow-up DM after the public post:

Mr. Buttigieg — I am a civic advocate from Ringgold, Georgia writing to share a framework I believe speaks directly to what you understand about civic capability from your experience as a mayor, veteran, and public servant: the National Experiential Civic Education Framework.

NECEF proposes structured, hands-on civic programs in schools — community service, emergency preparedness, infrastructure stewardship, and collaborative leadership. Not civics class. Actual citizenship. Built on existing federal infrastructure with full state and local control over program content. Cost: $57-$87 per student annually. Precedent programs — City Year, Maryland's service graduation requirement, FEMA CERT — have three decades of documented outcomes.

The framework is bipartisan by design. The state flexibility provisions give it genuine conservative appeal. I believe you are one of the most credible voices in America to speak to why civic capability has to be built deliberately — and why this particular moment demands that investment.

I have a full white paper ready to share, including a cost framework, proven program models, and a measurement system. Would you or your team be willing to take a look?
