Dear Executive Director,

The National Experiential Civic Education Framework is, at its core, a proposal to give every American student the kind of formative civic experience that AmeriCorps alumni already know changes a person for life. I write to ask whether AmeriCorps Alums would consider becoming a formal advocacy partner for NECEF's national launch.

The framework proposes school-based civic programs built directly on the AmeriCorps model — structured service, community partnership, dedicated program coordinators, and rigorous outcome tracking. It draws explicitly on City Year's 35-year track record as proof of concept. AmeriCorps alumni are living evidence that this works.

What we are asking of AmeriCorps Alums is threefold. First, organizational endorsement of the white paper and public advocacy for the framework. Second, mobilization of your alumni network as constituent voices to their senators and representatives — alumni in every state, across both parties, who can speak personally to what this kind of civic programming produces in a person. Third, participation in the framework's bipartisan advisory board.

No constituency can speak to this more credibly than yours. Your members are the argument made human. I would welcome a conversation about how AmeriCorps Alums can play a central role in this campaign.

In civic partnership,

Gina Aulabaugh
