Dear President & CEO,

Points of Light was founded by President George H.W. Bush on the conviction that volunteer service is the foundation of a strong, free society — that the strength of America lies not in its government, but in the daily acts of millions of citizens choosing to contribute to something larger than themselves. The National Experiential Civic Education Framework is built on exactly that conviction.

NECEF proposes embedding structured civic service programs in schools nationwide: community service projects, emergency preparedness training, infrastructure stewardship, and collaborative leadership development. It gives the next generation the experience of service before they are old enough to have chosen cynicism over contribution.

Points of Light's bipartisan founding and cross-partisan reputation makes your endorsement uniquely powerful in this effort. A framework championed by a Bush-founded institution cannot easily be dismissed as a progressive project. That credibility — earned over decades of nonpartisan service advocacy — is exactly what is needed to bring this across the finish line.

I am asking Points of Light to formally co-sponsor this framework, to leverage your national network of service organizations as program delivery partners, and to lend your platform to the public launch. You are, in a very real sense, the institutional embodiment of what NECEF is trying to build at scale.

President Bush called service 'a thousand points of light.' NECEF is the structural investment that ensures the next generation knows how to be one of them. I would welcome a conversation about partnership.

With admiration and gratitude,

Gina Aulabaugh
